Trudeau Has 16-Vote Margin

Liberals Win Clear Majority In Canadian Parliament Vote

By Ronald Koven

TORONTO, July 9 (WP).-Prime Minster Pierre Elliott Trudeau's Liberal party won a sweeping victory last night in Canada's national elections

The results upset the general prediction that the best the Liberals could expect was a repetition of the 1972 results, in which they won a thin plurality of 109 in the 264-seat House of Commonths as a minority government. The Trudeau cabinet was at the mercy of the small New Democratic party, which held the balance of power with 31 seats in Unofficial results of yesterday's balloting gave the Liberals 140 seats—a majority of 16 and seven more seats than the minimum needed for an outright majority. The victory came mainly at the expense of the leftist New Democrats, whose strength fell from 31 to 16 seats, and whose leader, David Lewis, lost his own district in Toronto to the Liberals.

The Progressive Conservative party's strength fell from 107 seats to 96.

Mr. Trudeau told his countrymen early today, "Canada has come out of this election strong, confident of its future, I just want to say I want to get on with the lob Robert Stanfield, who saw his opposition Conservative party lose its third national election since he assumed its leadership said: "We fought a good, hard campaign. We put the issues clearly before the people as we saw

Conservatives might replace the 60-year-old Mr. Stanfield as party leader. The Prime Minister's victory was a major reversal in the trend that has seen inflation-beset governments in the non-Communist world lose power.

Mr. Stanfield had centered his campaign on a demand for price and wage controls to combat in-flation. But Mr. Trudeau managed to convince Canadians that inflation is an international problem about which the Ottawa government could do little by itself. He managed this despite a 1.7 per cent increase Canadian prices in the month of May alone.

LISBON, July 9. - Premier Adelino da Palma Carlos and four other centrist ministers resigned today because the Council of State, a body with veto power over government decisions, refused to give him more powers, the Information Ministry announced.

Diplomatic sources described the move as Portugal's most critical political development since the military coup of April 20. The announcement said that Mr. Palma Carlos told the Council of State Saturday that he had asked President Antonio de Spinola for "immediate measures which he considered indispensable to carry out his functions with efficiency and dignity.' The Council of State studied [Mr. Palma Carlos's] statement and decided to consider only partally the suggestions aimed at enlarging the powers of the

Italian Unions Start Strikes On Tax Plan

4-Hour Walkouts In Series of Protests

By Paul Hofmann

ROME, July 9 (NYT).—Italy's powerful labor front began 2 series of four-hour strikes today to protest against the new taxes decreed by the government in an austerity effort aimed at staving off national bankruptcy.

The three major trade union groups, acting jointly called on workers in northwestern Italy. Tuscany and Sixty to demonstrate against the way the government is tackling the financial crisis.

In the next few days, similar strikes and protest rallies will be organized by the labor coalition in all other regions of the country. The trade union movement rejects many features of the government's austerity program, announced on Saturday, on the ground that it is based almost exclusively on undirect taxation, like higher sales taxes for meat and other consumer goods and increased rates for gasoline and electricity. It says these levies hit the working class relatively

Militant sectors in the labor front-especially the metal workers and building trades unionskeep pressing for a nationwide general strike to demonstrate against the government's austerity

However, a more moderate line so far has prevailed in the tradeunion movement. Its advocates are telling the rank and file that a long-range strategy of scattered work stoppages and other protests is preferable to keep pressure on the government and induce it to change its social and economic policies.

The cabinet today completed procedures to have the eight decrees in the austerity package speedily ratified by Parliament. The measures are meant to raise about 55 billion in revenue during the next 12 months.

U.K. Labor Party Loses MP And Its 12% Margin in Polls

LONDON, July 9 (Reuters).-Britain's minority Labor government suffered two blows today —former Navy Munister Christopher Mayhew resigned from the party and an opinion poll indicated that Labor's lead in voter popularity has melted away.

Mr. Mayhew, 59, a strong sup-porter of the Arab cause and the European Economic Community announced that he is joining the Liberal party. He has been a member of Parliament 23 years. He called for a political realignment leading to an all-party coalition government in Britain-"a revolt of the center against the extremes -and accused Labor of being "too vulnerable to the extreme left and too dependent on the unions. He said that he was not convinced that a clear Labor majority at the next election-balloting expected in the autumn-would be in the country's best interests. He said he would give up his south London seat of Woolwich East eventually and would seek a new one as a Liberal candidate. He was navy minister in 1966 but resigned when a previous Lacor government decided against building an aircraft carrier to ing him a right-winger. His departure cuts Labor's effective margin over the Conservatives in the House of Commons to two seats and increases the Liberal party strength to 15 in the 635seat house. The Liberals have been urging a government of national unity to pull Britain out of its economic crisis. The Labor party continues to reject any coalition, but the public opinion poll published toda; —the first in some weeks—seemed certain to revive speculation about coalition possibilities.

According to the poll, Labor has lost a 12 per cent lead it enjoyed in June.

The poll said that each of the two now has 37 per cent support. the first time they have been evenly rated since the Peb. 28 election. The Liberals have increased their backing from 18 to 22 percent.

All other polls since the election had shown Labor with a lead. A voting pattern similar to the poll would deny either main party a governing majority. The prospect of another stalemate might lead to the postponement of an election, despite recent signs from Labor ministers that one is virtually inevitable after summer vacations.

EEC Goals Set By Schmidt And Giscard

Economic Issues Put Before Political Unity

By John M. Goshko BONN' July 9 (WP). — West German Chancellor Helimut Sclunidt and French President Valer: Giscard d'Estaing agreed that the European Economic Community should put its first emphasis in the months ahead on resolving the myriad economic difficulties besetting the Common Market.

But they also made it clear that the successful pursuit of such ends requires resolution of the more immediate problems that have plunged the communi-These include the financial crisis in Italy, the demand by

The two have been close personal friends since their prior service as finance ministers in the Bonn and Paris regimes. Although they gave no really con-crete indication of what joint initiatives they may be planning to take in European affairs, the visit was marked by an unmistakable aura of cordiality and lack of tension.

This was in marked contrast to some of the visits exchanged by their two predecessors, former German Chancellor Willy Brandt and the late French President Georges Pompidou.

Despite a patina of friend-liness, Mr. Brandt and Mr. Pompidou, especially during the last two years, had been unable to conceal frequent sharp differences between their governments.

His descent into what he called the "bear pit" cost him the support of many intellectuals, but the general electorate apparently approved it heartily.

The committee said that if the proposed cuts were carried out, they will lead to a defense contribution far less than should reasonably be expected from a country with the resources of the Netherlands.

It noted that Dutch Defense Minister Henk Vredeling had given assurances that plans for reducing the "ready strength" of the army would be suspended until the conclusion of the East-West force reduction negotiations m Vienna.

In a passage intended to soften the impact of its criticism, the NATO committee said the allies welcomed the willingness of the Dutch government to continue consultation on all aspects of its defense plans after its paper has been published. But the committee urged the government to take the views of other alliance governments into

"serious consideration." The task of formally informing the authorities in The Hague of the alliance's displeasure will fall to the NATO secretary-general, Joseph Luns, a former Dutch foreign minister.

Dutch Reject Criticism

THE HAGUE, July 9 (Reuters).-Dutch Defense Minister Vredeling tonight rejected the NATO criticism. He told a press conference that the Dutch decision to cut its armed forces and move from quantity to quality had not received the attention it deserved for the improvements contained in the plan.

Commenting on the NATO charge that the Dutch plans would "seriously weaken" NATO defenses, Mr. Vredeling said: "I deny this." He added that a letter had been sent to the Dutch lower house outlining the reasons for rejecting the NATO criticism.

"Looking at the plans in their totality, the government is convinced that the Netherlands will make a credible and proportional contribution to the alliance defense. This contribution can stand comparison with the other allies, both regarding defense ability and the financial aspect," the letter said.

Ex-Warden Sees Prisons Beyond Control in U.S.

SAN QUENTIN, Calif., July 9 UPI .- Prison violence is escalating at such a rapid pace that penitentiaries will be unmanageable in 10 years, according to the retired warden of San Quentin

Louis Nelson, who last month ended a long career in which he had risen from guard to chief of the state's toughest prison, blamed lawyers and judges for much of the trouble. "Some of their decisions border on lunacy," he said in a recent interview. For example, Mr. Nelson recalled, a judge once ordered him to make two books available to a convicted burglar. One described how to make a homb and the other how to pick locks.

During the first six months of this year, there were 28 stabbings, four fatal, at the 122-yearold prison here. Many of the violent incidents resulted from gang warfare and disputes over narcotics. Several times gen al lockups were ordered to stop the trouble.

"Prison violence has risen to the point that in the next Cocade, prisons will be unmanage-" Mr. Nelson declared.

keoy characterized Mrs. Klarsfeld as a woman whose "idealism and good intentions had been transformed by hatred into fanaticism." The court, he said, had no choice other than to follow the law's "explicit instruction" that "no one has the right to imperil the rights of others." He rejected the prosecution's recommendation that she be given a six-month suspended sentence but he reduced the two-month sentence by the 22 days she served in pretrial detention. And he intimated that if Mrs. Klarsfeld should appeal and give assurances of good behavior the court might change its mind about suspending the sentence. Following the verdict, Mrs. Kiarafeld left for France with the court's permission to ponder s decision about appealing or returning to serve her sentence. There was some speculation that she might simply not come back to West Germany.

There was also considerable speculation about whether Chancellor Schmidt will be able to make good on his promise to get the agreement with France ratifled by the Bundestag. Such a move could bring him into conflict with the Free Democratic party, the coalition partner of Mr. Schmidt's Social Democrats.

In the past, powerful forces in the Free Democrat ranks have argued that questions of war guilt should be forgotten on humanitarian grounds.

4 Jailed in Baltimore On IRA-Arms Charge

BALTIMORE, July 9 (AP),-Four men were sentenced here yesterday to six years in jail for buying weapons illegally for the Irish Republican Army.

The four, who could have been sentenced to from 10 to 40 years. are: Klarnan McMahon, 36, of Silver Spring, Md., Francis Larkin, 35, of Riverdale, Md., and Henry Hillick, 31, and James Conlen, 34, both citizens of Northern Ireland.

The man were convicted in late May on charges of obtaining AR-15 rifles and blasting caps, and of attempting to obtain machine guns and plastic explosives.

Tokyo Policy, Cabinet Seen Not Changing Despite Vote Setback

For Tanaka's Party

By Fox Butterfield TOKYO, July 9 (NYT).-The ruling Liberal Democratic party's setback in Sunday's elections for the upper house of parliament continues a decade-long trend in which the conservatives have steadily lost popularity but have retained control of the government. Leaders of the party said today that the mixed outcome probably would not result in any immediate changes in personnel or policy in Premier Kakuel Tanaha's cabinet. But Mr. Tanaka's chances to win re-election next year for another three-year term as party president, and thus as premier, appeared to have been jeopardized.

And in broader terms, the apper house results cast doubt on how long the Liberal Deno-crats can continue their quartercentury of dominance over both houses of the Diet (parliament) Elections for the lower house, where the real legislative power resides, are considered likely early next year. Nearly complete returns showed that the Liberal Democrats emerged with 62 seats, or eight emerged with 62 seals, or eight less than they held before the election. Sixty-three seats were required for the Liberal Demo-crats to hold a majority in the chamber. About half of the seats in the 252-member upper house were up for election.

Without Endorsement

However, the figures are somewhat misleading, because two of the eight successful independent candidates were Liberal Democrats who ran without party endorsement and another is closely allied with the conservatives.

Added to the 64 seats the Liberal Democratic party already held in the other half of the upper house, the election gave the conservatives a slim majority of six, including the unendorsed pair and the party ally. The LDP's percentage of the popular vote was even more disheartening for Mr. Tanaka, who had staked his prestige on the elections by intensive cam-

3 Disagreements Said to Block Missile Curb

"The only thing that was in the cards at this time was a MIRV agreement," said another official, who was involved in the Moscow talks. "But the Russians were not prepared to accept any on several points.

The areas of disagreement. the sources said, included the questions of how many missiles with multiple warheads should be allowed, what kinds of mis-siles could be readily fitted with such warheads and how many of the older land-based missiles should then be phased out.

'Real Parity' a Goal

In Moscow, Soviet sources said that the Kremlin rejected the proposals because it wanted "real parity" with the United States in strategic arms. Agreement was not reached, the sources said, because of a deadlock primarily over the number of mis-siles on which the Soviet Union would be permitted to install multiple warheads.

The U.S. proposal, according to the Washington sources, would have had the following effects: · It would have involved small reductions in the numbers of missiles on both sides.

• The United States would have been left with several thousand multiple warheads it already has deployed. The Soviet Union could have started deploying its multiple warheads, but the intal would have been well below the U.S. deployment.

• Nothing would have been done to curtail new U.S. or Soviet bomber and submarine

· Both sides could have continued to improve the accuracy of their missiles.

Focus Was Narrow

Some U.S. officials said the focus of the Moscow talks was narrow because the Soviet leaders no longer expressed an interest in limiting other aspects of the arms race. Like the U.S. leadership, the officials said, the Russians have come to see the key to the future nuclear arms balance in an agreement on limiting multiple, independently targetable re-entry vehicles, or MIRVs.

"Each side put forward proposals to let it do what it was going to do anyway," one rank-ing official said.

After the attempts failed the Moscow summit meeting ended with the announcement that both sides would seek a new 10year interim agreement to replace the present five-year interim accord which expires in 1977.

Limits on Missiles

By that agreement, the United States was restricted to 1,000 land-based missile launchers if it built up to 710 sea-based misfigures for the Soviet Union were 1.410 and 950. The accord did not mention multiple warheads.

By the end of 1975, the United States expects to have placed multiple warheads on most of its missile force, for a total of about 7,000 separately targetable warheads. Moscow is expected to begin its deployment late in 1975

By 1980, at official projections, United States could have 10,000 missile warheads compared with 5,000 to 7,000 for the Soviet heavy Soviet land-based missiles The lifting power of these missiles was estimated to be so great as to permit Moscow to deploy as many as 15,000 to 17,000 separately targetable warheads by the early 1980s.

Soviet Threat Cited

Deployments at these levels, many officials contended, would allow Moscow to pose a real threat to 90 per cent of the U.S. land-based missiles.

Secretary of State Henry Kissinger therefore proposed to the Russians that both sides phase out their land-based missiles because of their vulnerability to a first strike and move toward greater reliance on submarinelaunched missiles.

Moscow rejected this proposal on two counts: It would have meant giving up its advantage in land-based missiles and it would have placed greater importance on long-range bombers, where the United States has the lead. Moscow then countered with a proposal that would have maintained the Soviet lead in the number of missiles, allowed parity in multiple warheads, prohibited U.S. deployment of the Trident a long-range submarine-based missile system—and the B-1 bomber. It also would have bomber. It also would have counted U.S. nuclear forces in and around Western Europe as part of the U.S. total. Washington rejected this proposal and gradually negotiations came to focus on a short exten-sion of the 1972 interim accord coupled with a new agreement to limit numbers of multiple warheads on both sides.

9 Astronauts Hail Training By Russians

Linkup Cosmonauts Also Happy With Pace

ZVEZDNY GORODOK, U.S.S.R., July 9 (WP).-Nine American astronauts today completed three weeks of training with a Soviet team for next summer's scheduled Apollo-Soyuz linkup in space and both sides said they were pleased with the progress.

"The Soviets have made some wonderful training devices," said Brig. Gen. Thomas Stafford, a veteran of the Apollo-10 mission around the moon and the com-mander of the U.S. crew. "We're working on all the devices we'll be using in flight. I'm certain we'll have a very successful joint

He and the eight other American astronauts, including the two other members of the prime crew -Donald Slayton and Vance Brand-have been working intensively here with the Russians on technical preparations for the flight and on language skills. In the last few days, according to Gen. Statiord, the Americans have been speaking Russian in classroom sessions and the Russians have used English.

All Docoments Bilineual All flight documents will be bilingual, but both sides say that they will be able to handle any problem in the others' language. The prime crews are how receiving 20 hours a week of language instruction. One problem that may never be resolved is the difference in national palates. The Russians, for example, do not think much of American bread; the Americans, who have been sampling Soviet space food, decided strongly against what one called "pickled

Otherwise there are no complaints from the Americans or from the Soviet prime crew, Valery Kubasov and Alexei Leonov. "Astronauts and cosmonauts seemed to be satisfied with the results so far," said Maj. Gen. He said that the Soviet spacecraft is on the whole less sophisticated than the American one because it was designed for earth orbits whereas the Apollo was designed to go to the moon,

Dissident Detained During Nixon Visit

A Jew Talks of KGB Knock on the Door

By Peter Osnos

MOSCOW, July 9 (WP).—Ina Rubin was clearing the breakfast dishes in her Moscow apartment about 10 am, on June 28 when there was a knock at the door. A neatly dressed man in his early 30s asked if he could see Vitali Rubin, Ina's husband.

He entered, sat down and, seeing the morning tea still on the table, asked politely if he could have some. Mrs. Rubin poured and called for her ausband, who was in the next 100m. Rubin was packing a small suitcase because he knew, as did his wife, that he was about to be ar-

A Talk With the KGB The Rubins' conversation with the KGB visitor was reconstructed by the couple as follows: "It must be unpleasant for you to be in such uncertain circumstances," the security man told Mr Rubin as he sat down. "Why don't you come with me for a few days?"
"I prefer my home to a jail,"

"Please," the security man said with a smile, "do this for me." "I have no intention of going voluntarily," Mr. Rubin said. "You will have to take me." The peace bid was made as government troops recaptured the 17th-century royal capital. Oudong, encountering only scattered resistance from withdrawing insurgent troops.

The town, almost totally destroyed, had been the target of a two-month government drive North of Phnom Penh along

The appeal for peace, political sources say, was made without any prior contacts with or commitment from the Khmer Rouge. It was issued by President Lon Nol at a meeting of military, political and religious leaders at his Phnom Penh residence.

The President said it is his hope the proposed dialogue with the rebels would lead to a ceasefire, withdrawal of all foreign have become increasingly paralyzed by a polarized electorate, there was more than national significance in Pierre Elliott Trudeau's thanks to the Canadian people for making the election "such a vital process for us," For Canada to have obtained, in this time of global uncertainty, when it has itself so many capacities for division, a government which can genuinely claim national leadership, is good for Canada and a model for other states.

To be sure, Mr. Trudeau has a very general mandate because he waged a very generalized campaign. Inflation was a great Canadian concern (as it is in all countries). Mr. Stanfield, the drily uninspiring Progressive Conservative leader, proposed a head-on attack upon inflation, with a freeze on incomes and prices, followed by controls. Mr. Lewis, the stormy head of the socialist New Democratic party, concentrated on prices, and the multi-national corporations. Mr. Trudeau denied that there was any easy answer to a global problem and asked for a vote of confidence in his party and himself. And he got it.

No one expected him to-at least on the scale of 16 seats more than the combined opposition and seven more than an absolute majority in Ottawa. And there will be much analysis of all the factors, economic, ethnic and in terms of personality, which brought the great surprise. But the fact remains bor to the south-can be grateful.

In a world where democratic governments that Mr. Trudeau swept the most populous provinces of Canada-Quebec and Ontario: made gains in the Maritimes, and even recaptured some seats in the Far West. Conservative strength remains in the Prairie provinces; the strength of the NDP has been almost halved (Mr. Lewis was defeated in his own constituency) and the populist Social Credit party is weakened in its present citadel, Quebec. Canada can be governed on a national scale.

> It will not be easy. Canadian federalism is loose by modern standards; the provinces have more autonomy than US states, and the subjects of division remain many and serious. Although muted during the campalgn, the question of the "French fact"especially as it relates to bilingualism-is far from resolved. And can Canada develop a national resources policy when the provinces assert so much authority over, say, oil from Alberta, or minerals, timber and water power in British Columbia? Then there are relations with the United States, about which there is a generally defensive acceptance of Canadian nationalism in Canada, but one which varies in intensity and specifics across the continent.

> Nevertheless, Mr. Trudeau has a mandate, and a majority to make it work in Ottawa. He is not, as was the case after the 1972 elections, forced to seek support from a minor party for every step, and can create a policy. For that, Canada—and its neigh-

Rebuff for Mr. Tanaka

Japan's voters have administered an unexpectedly sharp setback to Prime Minister Tanaka and the Liberal-Democratic government in a record turnout for elections to the Upper House of the Diet. This is the major significance of the voting even if final returns give the ruling party, in office for the last quarter-century, a slim majority in the 252-seat House of Councilors.

Despite an inflation rate pushing 25 per cent annually, the highest in any industrial country, Mr. Tanaka had hoped to increase his party's nine-seat majority in the Upper House. His chances looked better after four opposition parties failed to agree on a common slate of candidates. As it turned out, each of the three biggest opposition groups the Socialists and Communists on the left gains.

Voters evidently were provoked not only House elections. by Mr. Tanaka's failure to curb inflation but by the lavish financial support provided for Liberal-Democratic candidates more openly than ever before by Japan's big corporations. Concern about environmental problems, exacerbated by the country's rapid industrial development, and about the government's potential threat to freedom of press and assembly may also have contributed to Mr. Tanaka's losses.

The Liberal-Democrats retain a comfortable majority in the House of Representatives, where the real parliamentary power resides, but the results of Sunday's vote for the upper chamber will jeopardize Mr. Tanaka's plans to run next spring for a new three-year term as party president, and thus as prime minister. In any event, the Japanese have demonstrated the health of their turnout of 73 per cent, a record for Upper

The Science Gap

From the energy crisis to Soviet MIRV multiple warhead missiles, the United States today is confronted by a plethora of dangers that with foresight might well have been headed off. Failure to perceive the true dimensions of these threats and to act upon them in time reflects, in part, the absence of an effective system for funneling topgrade scientific advice directly and quickly to the White House.

The system of a Presidential Science Adviser with direct access to the Chief Executive-alded by an Office of Science and Technology and a broad-gauged advisory committee drawn from the nation's most eminent researchers and engineers -- was initiated by President Eisenhower after the sputnik scare of 1957. It was expanded by President Kennedy, fell into disuse toward the end of the Johnson administration, and was eventually abolished by President Nixon.

Questions of armament and disarmament. which dominated the work of the President's science advisers in the Eisenhower administration, were turned back to the Pentagon, the Atomic Energy Commission and the Central Intelligence Agency. Civilian science problems were relegated to the National Science Foundation, whose chief lacks direct access to the President.

Would the United States, given better scientific advice to Mr Nixon, have rushed ahead with MIRV multiple warheadswhich it invented and which now endanger the United States—deploying more than 5,000 before opening serious negotiations with the Russians on MIRV limitations? Would not action have been undertaken years ago to deal with the energy, food and transportation shortages that have been long predicted and are now upon us? No one can be sure that the scientists would have been more far-seeing than other policymakers or that the President would have taken their advice, but the chances would certainly have been improved.

The need for an "early warning" system on science-related policies is one of the major arguments for revival of high-level science advisory machinery in Washington. It is the view urged on the President by a blue-ribbon panel named by the National Academy of Sciences to study the problem.

The panel, headed by Dr James Killian, former president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, proposes creation of a three-man council for science and technology with a policy role similar to that of the Council of Economic Advisers. Its chairman, with direct access to the President, would be a member of the Domestic Council, could attend meetings of the National Security Council, advise the secretary of state on foreign policy matters affected by scientific considerations, work closely with the Office of Management and Budget in setting prioritles for the government's vast research expenditures and make an annual public report. This is one of the reforms of the Washington administration that is urgently needed.

DARIS-President Tito of Yugoslavia is now in Bucharest conferring with Nicolae Ceausescu, his Romanian colleague. and although-as neighbors, unorthodox Communists, and highly independent-minded leaders-they are always interested in each other, this time they have more than usual to discuss. The main burden of their colloquy: What to do in a time of troubles? Curiously ominous signs have cropped up this spring. First a rumor appeared in Vienna that the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact was contemplating an invasion of Yugoslavia presumably when the 82-year-old Tito dies: called "Pinn Polarka," This rumor foresaw an attack by Czechoslovakian and Soviet troops, heading southward across Austria, whose certitory would be violated.

To me this sounds like blataut nonsense because at the very least it would smother Past-West detente, to which Breznoev is committed, and at the probable worst it could touch off World War III. Nevertheless. Marshol Yakubovsky and General Shiemenko, Russian Numbers 1 and 2 of the Warsaw Pact, have been circling Eastern Europe in a series of conferences with local commanders and defense ministers.

Into Bulgaria

Most important perhaps was an unadvertised visit to Bucharest by Yakubovsky. Following this the Romanians (who are themselves no slouches at rumormongering) put out the report that Moscov was demanding extraterritorial rights to a curidor leading through the Romanian Dobrudja (a province on the Black Seal connecting the Soviet Ukraine with Bulgaria.

All this talk has touched off speculation that the Russians want to move troops into Buigaria (where they have hold). Todor Zhivkov, the Sofia bush referred last March to an uld but refrigerated idea of incorporating Bulgaria into the

Gained Credence

Moreover, the West has assumed for a long time that, when the redoubtable Tito dies, Moscow will seek in one or another way to corral this heretical Communist nation back to orthodoxy and the Warsaw Pact. This assumption gained credence in 1968 after the Russians forcibly seized Czechoslovakja. Moreover, the most prevalent

A more usual theory is carefully planted ascuts might stir the ashes of nationalism among the various Yugosiav peoples and then request Russian intervention to "restore order."

Tito has carefully sought to dampen any such thoughts in Moscow and has even cultivated an intermittent flirtation with Brezhnev. But this has been interspersed with other periods of mistrust. Yugoslavia has avoided Soviet military protection and Soviet interpretation of Marxism.

Yet the USSR certainly would like to reaffirm its dominance over Yugoslavia, thus gaining Adriatic strongoomts, a militury border with NATO Italy 'aircuay in the midst of crisis) and onifianking neutral Austria and pro-Chinese Albania. Washington is fully alert to the problem and—in no uncer-tain terms—has cautioned Moscow to lay off, warning that pressure would promptly produce 's maus trouble" with the United States. The question is, will the Kremlin wholly believe this? After all. the only Western response to the

Kissinger Proposal

A Debate in the Dark

T ONDON.-The shape and the needed statistical information is problems of the developing U.S. debate on modest arms agreements with the Soviet Union have begun to emerge as Secretary of State Henry Kissinger toured Western Europe presenting his version of what happened at the Moscow summit meet-

As they listened, many West European diplomats candidly admitted that the subject is just too technical for them to absorb, a difficulty Americans are bound

Kissinger feels that there should he a national delate on the philosophy underlying America's strategic plans, just as he has been eager to engage the Russians on the nature of the problems behind the arms race. But as long as the technicalities of the Soviet and American positions remain secret—as they now can —actual debate is expected to be not-only hard to understand, butimprecise in content. The facts, even when available, are hard

When Kissinger tries, for example, to refute Sen. Henry M. Jackson's charge that he left a dangerous loophole in the existing interim agreement signed in 1972, many people say he loses them in technicalities about the difference in the kind of mis-siles that can be put aboard modern nuclear submarines and older diesel submarines, or about the relationship between war-heads and missiles.

WASHINGTON-With the oral arguments before the Supreme Court completed and the parade of witnesses before the House Judiciary Committee coming to an end, the case of Richard Nixon is moving inexorably toward its first real climax: The House vote on impeachment.

No one knows what the outcome of that vote will be, for it depends on the weight of the evidence the committee has still to assemble in coherent fashion. the pending decision are beginning to come into clear focus.

If the House votes to impeach Mr. Nixon, there would be little need to revise the widespread predictions of significant Democratic gains in the November election. In truth, those predictions are premised on an unfavorable verdict against the President.

But suppose the House goes the other way? Suppose there are few Republican defections and that enough Democrats cross the line to exonerate Mr. Nixon of every charge leveled against him by the Judiciary Committee in its expected bill of impeachment? Legally, that would be the end of the matter. The cloud over Mr. Nixm's future would disappear and he could go back to being a full-time president. Congress could go back to legislating. Messrs. When there issues are discussed in general terms, as they usually are m public, even experts say there is no way to measure what effect specific proposals would really have on U.S. security. This has reportedly resulted in disagreement within the U.S. leadership not only about just what kind of pact would be safe for the United States, but also what should be the yardstick for measuring Salety 🤫

And when the issues are discussed in terms of the available partial figures about numbers of missiles and warheads and future. untested weapons, the point of how to escape the danger of nuclear war and prevent the yearning for absolute security from consuming all else seems to get lost.

Confusion can often stem from the top. Kissinger has spoke against the tendency of military leaders in both Washington and Moscow to suppose that the generals on the other side are getting all they want and that their own side must run twice as fast to keep up. He regards this view of each other as a distortion, almost Orwellan.

Exchanges Vowed

Kissinger has, in fact, confirmed that 1965 was set as the expiration date for a new proposed 10-year agreement because it would have been too ominous to propose the date of George Orwell's "1984," a story about a future totalitarian regime.

The dilemma produced by corecy and technical complexity. forcing either judgment by ignorance or floundering in detail. was somewhat eased for Soviet and U.S. officials as a result of the Moscow summit talks. Some information was exchanged and further exchanges were pledged.

But many of the agreements reached in Moscow could obscure, rather than aid, future nuclear debate.

For example, two agreements on dismentling or redsploying nuclear weapons covered under the existing interim treaty went into great detail but were kept secret.

Kissinger said this was at the request of the Russians. Their reason for being willing to share sensitive nuclear secrets with the men who command the rival superpower, but not with the world at large, is believed to be Moscow's reinclance to allow its own public in on the facts of nucient life.

Sen Edward M. Kennedy receptly asked the Russians to make public the principles of their nuclear Strategy dispel suspicion in the West. He said the Russians told him their own people would not understand the drive for détente if discussions of nuclear rivalry and the arms race were also put before

The protocol on the pact limiting underground nuclear tests, signed at the summit meeting. was another example of the sharing of nuclear affairs among Soviet and U.S. officials, but not publicly: The agreement provides for an exchange of information on the underground testing sites each country uses to perfect its war-heads, including geographical and geophysical details.

The purpose of exchanging this hitherto secret information is to enable each side to monitor tests conducted by the other without crossing national borders, and thus to make sure that the threshold limiting underground tests to a yield of 160 kilotons has not been violated.

The museum housed in the columned Villa Malagnou, along the Route de Malagnou in the center of Geneva, is said to have one of the most impressive watch collections, in Europe, And although the idea behind the museum is to tell the story of Geneva's role in watchmaking, the pieces on view are by no means limited to Swiss watches. Among German, Italian and Oriental timepieces, French pendules and British automatons there are very rare works such as the German rectangular table clock; dated 1583, that dials up complex astronomical calculations.

As an experiment, it certainly qualifies.

Such a case is of clinical interest, but it scarcely constitutes a sympathetic protaconist and one wearies of his dismal game.

Distress Signal

The technique of voice-over narration is almost inevitably a distress signal, denoting that the director is hard put to dramatize his material. In this instance, however, despite its constant presence, the voice-over does not clarify the proceedings sufficiently. NEW YORK, July 9 (NYT).-The longest most successful in (mancial terms: Newport Jazz Festival in the 21-year history of the series came to an end Monday with a free, midday concert at the Lincoln Center Fountain Plaza by Kid Thomas's Preservation Hall Jazz Band. The concert, originally intended to be part of the series of free afternoon concerts held last week at Forcham University, could not be scheduled at that time. It was presented Monday instead as what George Wein, producer of the festival, called "a thankyou concert" for those who attended the festival, which ended its regular programming Sunday night. The concert extended the festival from 10 days to 11, making it the longest since the series was started with a two-day affair in Newport in 1954. The traditional New Orleans Jazz of the Preservation Hall added a touch of balance to a festival which had given relatively little hearing to the older forms. With Kid Thomas providing a crisp, biting lead on trumpet, Emmanuel Sayles giving the group a strong driving beat with his banjo and Charlie Hamilton stomping merrily every time he got a piano solo, the group ran gamut from traditional blues and old pop tunes ("June Night" was a favorite, to such "modern" material as Glenn Miller's hit, "In the Mood," which they approached in a surprisingly slow and stately manner. Wiping Out Losses

This concert wound up a festival which, for the first time since it moved to New York in will show a substantial profit-between $100,000 and $150. 000, according to Wein. This will all but wipe out the loss of more than $150,000 incurred by the festival last year. In its first year in New York (1972) it broke the festival's 32 indoor events this year, 15 were com-pictely sold out and another six were close to capacity. Eight concerts played to houses that were little more than half full and only three drew less than half a house. The boat rides jazz bands on a Staten Island ferry a perennial favorite, were extremely popular.

The Sell-Outs

From the point of view of attendance, there were only two unqualified disasters at this year's festival-a program of contemporary and avant-garde 1832 called "Music of the New Breed" and a concert of the music of two big bands of the past, Mic-Kinney's Cotton Pickers and Tommy Dorsey's orchestra. Each played in Carnegic Hall almost 90 percent empty. Despite the vast difference in the types of music involved in the two concerts, they had one thing in common-both were held Saturday afternoons.

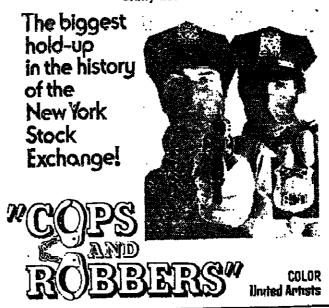

The sell-outs included two midnight jam sessions at Radio City Music Hall, a program on The Musical Life of Charles Parker, solo concerts by Nina Simone and Sarah Vaughan, the first of two programs saluting jazz and the American song, and two big-band concerts tone with Stan Kenton and Maynard Ferguson, the other by Count Basic There was relatively little that was new or adventurous at this 21st Newport Jaz: Festival. Most of the concerts were built around established names with a proven following and, because several performers were usually involved in each concert, each event tended to have its ups and downs.

In view of the festival's losses last year. Wein's conservative approach to programming this year was understandable. now that he has had his first big financial return with the festival, he is not inclined to fling caution to the winds.

ONN. July 8 (AP-DJ).-It ers nearly certain that West man authorities will limit forexchange speculation by es. informed sources said tonie Secretary Karl Otto Poehl he Finance Ministry announce in June 28 that the ministry id investigate whether dealon the forward market ought e restricted following the cole of Bankhaus Herstatt. aurces said Finance Ministry

erts currently are considering ting banks forward "expoto 20 to 30 per cent of their le capital.

ne senior foreign exchange ler said a limitation on open tions of 20-30 per cent table capital would not conat large banks but "might kill business of small banks." e noted that a regulation of : type would have limited Herts open position to 15 million 20 million deutsche marks, a. r small amount.

Fuji, Rockwell to Build Plane

Fuji Heavy Industries has signed an agreement with Rockwell International of the United States to develop a twin-engined, six to eightseat business aircraft. Puji says both firms hope to start mass production of the aircraft in a few years and will spend about $10 million on the project. The Japanese firm will design and test the aircraft, while Rockwell will su-pervise interior fittings and optional equipment. Puji will sell the aircraft in the Far East and Rockwell in other areas.

Bell & Howell Expects Lower Net

Bell & Howell expects second-quarter earnings to drop to between 79 cents and 87 cents a share, compared with 89 cents a year ago. Donald Frey, chairman, says the prediction includes about 14 cents a share from two nonrecurring transactions. There will be a $1.5 million after-tax gain from the sale of patents to Kodak and the write-off of about $700,000 net after tax of unamortized copyright expense and other deferred charges on its home study accounting courses. Gains on specialized business equipment and supplies and learning systems and materials sales were not enough to offset a loss from the company's U.S. consumer photo-products business, he says. The company was also hurt by higher interest rates and the continued substantial decline in earnings from Bell & Howell's schools.

A Banca Unione official, who declined to be named, said he welcomed the naming of Mr. Fignon as managing director and also noted that if the Banco di Roma loan is not repaid the state-controlled bank will become its largest shareholder.

Mr. Sindona also holds 400 million shares in Generale Immobiliare, only 20 per cent of the total outstanding but enough for effective control. Half of these have been put up as collateral for the loan.

Banco di Roma said the loan and the collateral of Generale Immobiliare shares offered would supply the Sindona banks "with the liquidity they need" and "keep in Italy control of the important company."

.nother aspect of the weakening position of Mr. Sindona in Italy was a court decision yesterday annulling two of three recent capital increases by Finambro, a financing concern controlled by Mr. Sindons.

nambro must greatly reduce its debt load, since the amount of debts that a company can carry must by law be kept in strict relationship to the amount of registered capital. There are no recent figures available on the amount of debt carried by Fi-nambro. The president of Finambro, Orio Giacchi, describes the concern as the "financial heart" of Generale Immobiliare and indirectly of the entire Sindona

Finambro, the court records showed, won government approval on June 6, 1973, for two capital increases—the first from 1 mil-Hon lire to 500 million lire, and the second to 20 billion lire from 500 million. A third increase was approved Aug. 3, to 160 billion

However, the court ruled that the second and third of these increases were approved on the basis of "certain errors of form." Furthermore, the court ruled, the last of the three raises was sought and approved before the second had been carried out, and shareholders approval had not been sought or obtained for the last increase. It is believed to have been partly anticipation of these rulings that the Sindona group sought and obtained the loan of $100 million from Banco di Roma.

Mr. Rush said there is no intention of bringing pressure to bear on specific industries or labor unions to hold back price or wage increases. Rather, he said, the objective is to consult with all segments of the economy on ways to deal with the "allpervasive problems of inflation." Meanwhile, Treasury Secretary William Simon said today that the biggest worry he has about the economic future is "whether or not the American people and their government will have the sustained political will to control inflation."

He reiterated that the antiinflation battle may take years to conclude and he urged that an "inflation-proof Congress" be elected this fall. Mr. Simon made his remarks in a speech to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. "We have increased government taxation," he said, adding that the government has also created too much money and new credit 'so that more borrowing and investment have taken place than could be financed out of savings." This has pushed the demand for goods above the capacity to based music critic for the International Herald Tribune) is that European music has reached the end of the creative road and that the musical future, as Ernest Ansempet suggested after hearing Sidney Bechet in 1919, lies with Afro-American music. This may still be viewed as outrageous in some "serious" music quarters, even though Mr. Pleasants has apparently been winning converts with considerable success since he first developed his ideas in "The Agony of Modern Music" in 1955. But to those readers who come from the other side of the musical fence—from the worlds of jazz and popular music-Mr. Pleasants is often apt to seem a charming innocent.

THE GREAT AMERICAN POPULAR SINGERS Bu Henry Pleasants. Simon & Schuster. 384 pp. $9.95.

This feeling develops largely because he is, at least in the early passages of his books, so pointedly taking his serious music colleagues by the hand and guiding them ever so gently through his rationalizations of the validity of "non serious" music—reassuring them with musicological parallels, approaching jazz and pop music in terms to which his fellow musicologists can relate, but which can seem a hit pompous to those who have already accepted these popular forms.

This, it turns out, is simply Mr. Plessants's seductive con game. He is charming but not at all innocent. Because he discovered jazz and pop music relatively late in life and came to them as a classically schooled musician with all the prejudices against which he has since argued. Mr. Pleasants views both jazz and popular music from a very different perspective from those who grew up with them and take them for granted. He is more curious about why things happen and how things happen than the writer who is naturally at home in these fields. And he digs

The list of "The Great American Popular Singers" that he considers in his latest book opens with Al Joison, Bessle Smith and Ethel Waters and proceeds more or less chronologically to Arctha Franklin, Peggy Lee and Barbra Streisand: He is impressed by all of them except Miss Frankin and Miss Streisand, whose "hollering" bothers him.

He notes the line of Afro-American characteristics that runs through the works of all but two of the 22 singers he has selected as most influential or characteristic during the years from 1920 to 1970 (the two ex-ceptions are Ethel Merman and key figures (although one might Judy Garland). He includes Al question Miss Stressand's rele-Joison among those who showed even if only superficially, and Miss Streisand because of her recent move into soul music, which he points out. is a style capable of absorbing. accommodating and even benefit-ing from her habitual excesses." It is his thesis that these Afro-

American characteristics have given American popular singing its identity. The fountainheads were, he says, Bessle Smith,

THE nonconformist view of Louis Armstrong and Ethel Henry Pleasants [London- Waters and, of the three, he considers Miss Waters the most influential.

Along with the interacting threads of : Airo-American infinences, Mr. Pleasants sees a between contemporary popular singing-with its clearly enunciated, almost conversational lyrics, its varied and inventive embellishments and its perceptive exploitation of rhythms classical singers of the 17th and 18th centuries before they came under the domination of composer and orchestra. An essential element in shaping this con-temporary manner of singing was the arrival of the micro phone, so that skill in its use he came decisive in raising Bing Croshy, for instance, from the general run of crooners in the late 1920s or in enabling Frank Sinatra to establish a sense of intimacy that distinguished his early success. arly success. Mr. Pleasants has read a great deal about his 22 singers. He offers the reader a barrage of quotations from other writers be-fore he enters his own agreements or occasional caveats. He also listened to a lot of records. His most interesting original con-tributions stem from his listening-analyses of the voices of each of the singers, done in the same terms that he would use in describing the voices of classical singers. This is something that popular singers are not normally subjected to and it goes a long way toward explaining the selec-tive skill that these singers use often instinctively, to exploit the most interesting aspects of their

As Mr. Pleasants moves along from Mildred Bailey to Billie Holiday to Eila Fitzgerald, from Jimme Rodgers to Hank Wil-liams to Johny Cash, from Ray Charles to Eivis Presley to B. B. King—a certain amount of repeti-tion and biandness sets in They are all great, and they are all put through the same format. Only as he arrives at the relatively new, young singers-Miss Franklin, Miss Streisand-does a caustic note creep in. And not until he gets to a brief coda does he touch on the disturbing factor of overarrangements and overpopulated accompaniment with which singers have been burdened (and to a degree distorted) for the last 80 years and on the current practice of "mixing in which the engineer rather that the singer is the crucial performer.

vance) and are part of a continuing thread of development (except for Miss Merman, who represents a dead end the last of the pre-microphone belters). But there are a few glaring absences -Connec Boswell, for example, who may have had more to do than Ethel Waters in establishing the "white" adaptation of the Afro-American tone and style that can still be heard in the work of white singers; or Mabel Mercer, a seminal influence who introduced a sense of artistry to popular singing that had strong effects on Miss Holiday and Mr. Sinatra and through them on innumerable other singers.

But because popular singers are rarely written about so perceptively, this is a novel and valuable book, one that should stimulate some fresh examinations of various areas of popular singing.

Brewers 6, White Sex 5

At Milwaukee, Mike Hegan's pinch-hit two-run homer in the 12th gave the Brewers a 6-5 victory over the Chicago White Sox. Don Money led off the 12th with a walk Stan Bahnsen retired George Scott on a fly ball, but Hegan, batting for designated-hitter Deron Johnson, hit his fifth homer.

Twins 6, Tigers 2

At Bloomington, Minn., Eric Soderholm's two-run homer and a triple by Craig Kusick sparked a four-run second inning that gave the Twins a 6-2 victory over Detroit The Twins, who had L2 hits, opened the second with Harmon Killebrew's single and Soderholm's homer Danny Thompson followed with a single and Kusick cracked his first major league triplo to score Thompson with the third run. One out later, Steve Brye singled home Kusick.

Orloles 6, Angels 5 At Anahem, Calif., Baltimore victory for the Orioles who dealt the Angels their ninth straight game. It was the sixth victory in the last seven games for Baltimore and it kept Dick Williams winless in eight tries as the new California manager.

All the early Oriole runs were uncarned as the Angels made two errors to go with singles by Bobby Grich, Don Baylor, Brooks Robinson and Andy Eichebarren and a hit batter.

Mets 2, Padres 1 At New York, Harry Parker and Bob Miller combined on a six-hitter as the Mets scored a 2-1 victory over San Diego, which lost its sixth straight game. Parker, 3-7, walked nine in eight innings, tying a chib record set by Nolan Ryan in 1971.

Astres 4, Cards 1 At Houston, Doug Rader's tworun homer in the fifth inning helped the Astros end Lynn Mc-Glothen's five-game winning streak and beat St. Louis, 4-1. Milt May led off the fifth with a single and then Rader slammed McGlothen's 0-2 fastball into the second deck of the leftfield seats for his ninth homer. Dodgers 4, Phillies 9

At Philadelphia, Andr Messeramith pitched a three-hitter as Los Angeles beat the Phillies, 4-0. Steve Yeager hit a two-run Messersmith struck out nine and walked four in posting his third shutout of the campaign, and lowering his earned run average to 2.01. The righthander has permitted only six earned runs in his last nine starts, and now owns a 9-2 mark.

Giante 5, Expos 4

At Montreal, relief pticher Randy Moffit slugged the first triple of his career, in the 10th inning, to score Mike Phillips as San Francisco edged the Expos.

Braves 5, Pirates 0

At Pittsburgh, Max Leon pitched a six-hitter and Atlanta scored four unearned runs in the fourth inning, sending the Pirates to a 5-0 defeat. Leon, making his first start of the year, picked up his first victory against two los-ses, while Jerry Reuss, who had sions, suffered his sixth loss

On the Playing Field With Nixon, Mitchell, Dean and Others

By Red Smith

NEW YORK, (NYT).-Through the courtesy of Stanley I. Cohen, a fan in Ridgewood, N.J., it is possible to brighten this morning with the advice that there was a Nixon, a Mitchell and a Dean on the Philadelphia Phillies of 1926 and a Cox on the Brooklyn Dodgers that same year. "I haven't done the research into individual games," Cohen writes. "but it is possible that these four names appeared in the same box score 48 years ago." It is possible, spite of the fact that both Mitchell and Dean were starting nitchers. Mitchell appeared three times in relief that season and Dean seven times, so one may have replaced the other against Brooklyn. Cox was the Dodgers' regular right fielder-Zach Wheat was in left and Gus Felix in center—so almost certainly he batted against both Mitcheil and

It may or may not be a coincidence that Mitchell threw a spitball, which was illegal for ordinary pitchers but not for him. Cox was one of 11 bearing that surname who made it to the major leagues. Sooner or later,

When Branch Rickey managed the St. Louis Browns of 1913, 1914 and 1915, his first-string catcher was Agnew. During World War I Agnew caught for the Boston Red Sox and went 0 for 9 in the World Series. The next year he went to Washington but didn't last out the season. Without giving undue attention to vice-presidential names—except to mention that L. B. Johnson patrolled the outfields for the Cubs, Angels, Milwaukee Braves and Cleveland through the 1960s -it can be noted that the big leagues have had the services of seven Fords. None won any special distinction on the football field, but all were versatile enough to walk across a room and chew gum at the same time. One Haldeman, Two Zieglers

A man named Haldeman played second base for Louisville in 1877. The Young American Who Is Known as Sikander Khan

By Parke Fulham

July's ago, three young men stumbled into a remote village locked in the rugged northwest highlands of the Hindu Kush. Exhausted and ill at the end of a 400-mile trek by horse and foot through the wild Afghan mountains, they hoped to cross a final rocky range, descend onto the plains and return to Kabul with a report on a devastating famine that had emptied villages and caused thousands of deaths in the forgotten hills.

Dressed as they were in turbans, robes and cartridge belts, speaking fluent Dari (Afghan Persian), they could be-and usually were mistaken for hill tribesmen themselves. For two months, they had traveled through a region barred to foreigners, little known in the nation's capital and barely thought of farther away. Only one of the trio, however, was Afghan: Nazar I-Gol, a young Kabul medical student. The other two were Westerners: Lloyd Baron. a Canadian economist, and Mike Barry, 25, a Princeton graduate (1970) and student of Middle Eastern anthropology.

Let Barry (Afghan name: Sikander Khan' take up the story. "We talked with the village elders; none seemed much interested in helping us. Except one: a short, outspoken man deferred to by the others. He told us we'd never make it over the pass. Bandits. Then he offered to take us on to the next village. After a day's hike, we reached it, on the last stage picking our way down steps hacked out of the rock centuries ago. The village itself was built along a gorge so narrow that it was called Kuchayi-Lalabay (The Street). The villagers were strangely cooperative. Then, we found out why: Our guide was the local bandit

PARIS, July 9 (IHT).—Two dent in them. We left at sunset, picking our way through the darkness up through gullies we thought would never end, nervous about our guide and worried whether we'd last. And then, just before dawn, we heard what we'd worried about all night: the soft noises of men appraching. Our friendly bandif screamed a few phrases; the noises died away. We asked him what he'd shouted. I told them not to worry,' he said, 'we're bandits too."

The wildness, the poverty, the beauty, the corruption: all make up the Afghanistan that has fascinated Barry since, at the age of 14, he picked up a photo book on the country in his parents' Paris flat. A year later, he was in Kabul, staying with an Afghan prince and his French wife, friends of friends back home in Paris. "I spent the summer in Kabul," Barry says, "wandering around the bazaars, picking up some Persian, meeting people from every social class." He was back the next three summers, returned again in 1969 and spent all of 1971 and 1972 in the country.

His first trip to the northwest in native costume was in 1966; in 1971, he became the first Westerner to trace the Jawand River to its sources in the rugged Hindu Kush. During most of those years, he was working at Princeton for a BA in Middle Eastern studies, then at Cambridge University for a post-graduate diploma in the same area of study. He is now studying for a PhD at McGill University's Institute for Islamic Studies.

The 1971-72 stay in Aighanistan, eventful as it was, ended in something of a disaster. "In November," Barry says, "the government told me my visa was not being renewed. They made it very clear that because of my reporting on the famine, I was no longer welcome."

A prolonged drought had sent grain prices soaring, and well-intentioned efforts by the United States to help proved all but useless. Relief ship-ments of wheat, intended for to return, but expects no real change in the life of the mountain people, or, indeed, in the problems that face Afghanistan.

"Afghanistan is a bankrupt state," he says. "There's no real way for it to flourish— there's no possibility, for in-stance, of collecting taxes from hungry peasants, instead were locked into storehouses by local landlords and sold, grudgingly, at five times the fixed price to the few who could afford it. Back in Kabul, few knew how serious the problem actually was. Fewer cared. Barry's report, distributed by the U.S. Aid mission cracked the facade of ignorance. A detailed, 60page social and economic analysis of an area Barry had visited off and on for over eight years, the report became the basis for his just-published book ("Afganistan," Editions du Seuil, Paris, 1974, 9.90 francs) that this month won France's Prix des Voyages.

"The book," says Barry, "is a light—and I hope appealing introduction to the country. It tries to convey not only a sense of Afghanistan's still very real feudal structure but a feel for the tradition and history of Islam and Central Asia, as well as the problems caused by eiforts to introduce modern science and technology. The most important insight it offers, I think, is that of the allpervasive importance of water to Afghan society. Landlords really are waterlords: They rent access to their watercourses and control the flow of water, down to hours and minutes.

The key man is the Mirabportant stopover on Marco Polo's Silk Route and by literally, the "Emir of the Waters"-he's the foreman who plundering India's raiss. But controls the sluice gates. A once Vasco da Gama discovered the sea route to the Orient, the peasant who can't pay is simply shut off, and his crop dies. Silk Route came unraveled. And There is an alternative: Lalmi, or dry-land farming. A peasant plundering the rajas no longer without the money to rent time is acceptable." Berry's next book will have on a watercourse simply strews his seed on the desert-which technically free land-after the winter snows melt and the sand is soggy. If enough rain nothing at all to do with the Near East. "It'll be called 'Baroque Tales'," he says, "and it will be about 17th-century colonial America . . . Brazil and Canada included. I'm fascinated by the period." That book, however, is three years off; there is after all the question of the McGill doctorate.

But 20 years from now, he has no thought of being a teacher. "I want to write, not to teach," he says, a not improbable statement for the son of two journalists. What else? "I want to learn more languages, draw (his sketches adorn the book just published), ride horseback and travel. If it doesn't sound too cocky, I'd like to become sort of a Renaissance man." Next stop along that path is Cairo. "Til spend a month there, polishing up my con-versational Arabic." And this fell, back to Montreal and Mc-Gill. And after that? "Well." he says, "I studied Chinese for

PEOPLE: Dale Carnegie and the Klan

Dimmie (sic) Johnson, elected a Klan at 19, says he owes it all to a Dale Carnegie course. Johnson, a machinist from Houston, said that the course had "really helped me in the Klan work, I've shown a great improvement." He was elected grand dragon of the Texas Fiery Knights of the Ku Klux Kian at a meeting Sunday in Dallas. In a phone interview with Paul Recer of the Associated Press, Johnson defended his membership, saying, "Because I'm a white racist and I believe. in the separation of the races... I believe the Klan is the best way of achieving that goal." He added that he plans to run for political office someday, "prob-ably as a state legislator. I don't know if the Klan will help or been impressed by Tom Engleton's efforts to stay close to the people of Missouri." This is said to be the first time that the former President's widow has made a political endorsement.

Nominated for vice-president on the McGovern slate in 1972, Eagleton was forced to withdraw from the race after it had been revealed that he had undergone psychiatric treatment. He is expected to win the Democratic nomination and to face a former Republican congressman, Thomas Curtis, in November.

of an Athens jail Tuesday so they could be married. Jeffrey Ernest Hockwell, 24, from Newquay, Cornwall, and Linda Jean Blow, 22, from Sydney, British Columbia, are awaiting trial for possession of drugs. The couple met in Greece last year and traveled to Turkey; they were arrested on their return to Greece when customs officials found a few grams of hashish in their baggage. Their wedding arrangements were made by their lawyers, who also ordered the bride's dress and the wedding cake. After the ceremony in the Protestant Community Church of St. Andrew, the couple returned to their separate cells. Their trial is scheduled for July 16.

The Duke of Wellington, whose ancestor helped win the battle of Waterloo, announced Tuesday that he has joined the flock of British aristocrats who invite the public into their homes—for a price. He said he reached the decision because he felt that the public should be able to see what the nation gave the first dukethe mansion at Stratfield Saye near Reading and an 8,700-acre estate. The house was built in 1630 and bought by Arthur Wellesley, the first duke of Wellington, in 1817 with money coming from public funds given him in recognition of his victory over Napoleon in 1815. The mansion will be open to the public as of

He managed to grab a hanging cable and found himself on top of an air-conditioner projecting from an eighth-floor window. Elsa Cohn was finishing the breakfast dishes when she heard a window shatter. "I saw a man standing on the window unit outside breaking the window," she said. "I was petrified." She ran for the elevator operator and told him a man was trying to get into her apartment. Finally help for Johnson came and he slipped through the window unbarmed except for a cut on his finger. "That's it for me," he said. "I" never go up again. I've got to find a new trade.
